The world's best photography is on it's way to Tallinn.

In June 2019 Fotografiska, the Stockholm-based internationally renowned meeting place for the world's best photography, will open in Telliskivi Creative City in Tallinn. Fotografiska aims to redefine the traditional museum experience by creating an urban meeting place where global citizens are invited to dwell, get inspired, question conventions and grow as individuals.

With a great network of world-class photographers at its core, Fotografiska Stockholm has hosted more than 190 exhibitions, including the work of iconic masters such as Annie Leibovitz, David La Chapelle, Irving Penn, Helmut Newton, Sarah Moon, Nick Brandt and Andres Serrano, as well as emerging talent. By taking a stand in controversial issues and stretching their social responsibility beyond the realm of traditional art institutions, Fotografiska has an influential history of playing an active role in society.

– The purpose is simple, we use the power of photography to unite, spread awareness and create positive impact in society. By giving space to the stories behind the images we open up discussions on topics that can't be ignored, whether they're beautiful, painful, surprising or uncomfortable,” says Margit Aasmäe, the CEO of Fotografiska Tallinn

The concept of Fotografiska Tallinn includes exhibition and event spaces, bar, a cafe, and restaurant, and a gift shop. The restaurant will be built on the Fotografiska philosophy of “Sustainable Pleasure” which blends a highly qualitative food experience with zero-waste and sustainable ingredient-driven cooking.

Fotografiska Tallinn is located in the heart of Telliskivi Creative City, in the venue known as the Red Building. As of today, the exterior restoration and construction are completed; interior work will continue over the coming months.

Fotografiska Tallinn is privately owned and co-founded by Estonian entrepreneurs Margit Aasmäe, Maarja Loorents, Rain Tamm and Peeter Pihel. The first Fotografiska opened in 2010 in Stockholm, founded by the brothers Jan and Per Broman.

– We're thrilled to expand globally, and we will continue to inspire higher consciousness through beautiful and thought-provoking photography. We believe Telliskivi Creative City in Tallinn will be a perfect home for the next Fotografiska. New York City will follow later this year, and London thereafter.” says Jan Broman, co-founder of Fotografiska.
